

Rick Packer

Rick Packer brings a fresh voice to workplace effectiveness. He is a sought out strategist, consultant, and speaker who works to improve the “health” of how organizations conduct business. Currently, Packer is at work on “TRAPPED at Work®” a book that helps corporate workers who feel trapped in their job. The feeling of being trapped in a job never goes away unless we are willing to insert ourselves into the solution.

Packer is straight-forward consultant with a refreshing approach that reminds organizations why they hire consultants – for sound advice, quick action, and strategic direction. For several years Packer has worked with several best-selling authors including Dr. John C. Maxwell and Patrick Lencioni as a strategist and consultant.

Packer honed his leadership and team effectiveness acumen at the center of the internet explosion while employed at CompuServe & UUNET. He led strategic teams in the largest Fortune 500 corporate merger in U.S. history at WorldCom and MCI, and provided solid leadership through a challenging time at WorldCom. These experiences equipped Packer for a strategic role in helping others grow in their ability to lead people and organizations.

Packer’s clients include the likes of: The Bill and Melinda Gates Foundation, Home Depot, Marathon Oil, Hilton Hotels, Eli Lilly, Motorola, Center for Disease Control, The United States Air Force and sports organizations at both the NFL and Collegiate levels.

Packer holds an undergraduate degree from The Ohio State University, an MBA from the University of Dayton, and executive education credentials from Stanford, College of Business.

He and his wife Kristy live in Atlanta, Georgia along with their three daughters Elizabeth, Olivia, and Lily where they are actively involved at NorthPoint Community Church. His hobbies include anything related to Ohio State football and reaching a personal goal of reading four books per month.
